Famous lead guitarist Jimmy Page from the legendary rock band Led Zeppelin was known for his tremendous electric guitar solos. Now you can bid and possibly win one of two Jimmy Page replica guitars!

These two high end, collectible Jimmy Page guitars are replicas of his awesome Gibson, 1959 Les Paul. Jimmy Page began using the Les Paul in the 1970's and he named it "Number Two." Gibson Custom recreated only 25 limited edition, "Number Two" guitars about four years ago with Page's personal signature. 325 total were produced. 100 were aged by vintage-reproduction master Tom Murphy, plus 200 were finished to match Gibson's VOS specs.

The guitar replicas are so spot on that even the unique wear of the Page's original guitar through decades of use were mirrored. There are wear marks, dents and even minor dings. Page himself owns guitar #1 himself.

The other 1959 Les Paul replica guitars became popular collectibles. Now you can have the chance to actually own guitars #2 and #5 in this very special charity auction. The guitar auction is supporting the two deserving charitable organizations – Little Kids Rock and USO. The auction will begin on Thursday June 19, 2014 at 4PM PDT and runs until Sunday, June 29 at 4PM PDT and will be hosted by Guitar Center at – www.ebay.com/jimmypagelespaul

Jimmy Page originally had the electronics of his "Number Two" guitar modified to try and achieve the widest possible range of sounds from two humbucker pickups. Page even tried to match his "Number One" Les Paul by having the iconic guitar's neck shaved down.

Each of the guitar's controls' potentiometers was replaced with a push-pull pot to allow individual pickup of switching functions.
