

Elope In Luxury Style

Have you always dreamed of traveling to an exotic place in a far corner of the world? What about staying on your own deserted island in the Pacific, or climbing the heights of Macchu Picchu?

Why not also get married there, in an authentic Andean ceremony? If you think that sounds amazing, but would possibly be a logistical nightmare, you're right. That's only if you're thinking of planning a traditional wedding. Consider eloping and now it's a little more feasible.

Forbes Traveler has compiled a list of some of the most stylish and unique places to elope, because, as they put it: "The classic elopement ... has been modernized and redefined. It's less about keeping secrets than keeping the experience personal-and perfect."

The popular image of an elopement is that it's a spur-of-the-moment decision made by a young couple sneaking away to get married before anyone (read: parents) can stop them.

Of course, we all know that's not always the case anymore.

Instead, elopements can be as elegant or complex as any other wedding – except for the fact that there is no guest list. (Which let's face it, is a major source of stress for many engaged couples.)
