Cosmic Extensionalism "X"

Cosmic Extensionalism or Cosmic X" is a new style of Art which was originally founded by Jack Armstrong in 1999. Armstrong was inspired by an ethereal experience he had with the famous gem stone known as the Black Star Sapphire of Queensland. The stone is believed to have magical powers. At the time he destroyed all of his previous works.

Cosmic X is a genre of modern art styles as is the famous genres of "Cubism" by Picasso or "Pop Art" by Warhol. It was originally founded as an organic art movement and is singular by comparison.

Cosmic X requires the artist to become the art they are creating, by feeling no separation between the art itself. This requires a unique state of mind to be reached, connecting to a universal presence, which Armstrong believes exists in each being. It is this connection that "creates the art, not the artist."

Each acrylic on canvas painting is multi-layered but also includes his personal touch. Armstrong's hair, fingerprints and DNA are present in all of his paintings.

What is so appealing about the creative works of Cosmic artist Jack Armstrong, is the limited number of his paintings. There are only 100 paintings in existence.

Jack also knew and worked with Andy Warhol. In 2001, he painted "Warhol Naked." This incredible piece of art is a touching tribute to his friend Andy. Jack has stated that one of the proudest moments in his life was being dubbed "The Last Wizard of art" by Warhol himself.
